Dear friend,

I cannot tell you how much I appreciate your thoughts and prayers at this time. The verbal inquiries as to my condition have been a real blessing and encouragement.

Two years ago I wrote the following:

It was seven weeks ago today that I received my Lyme diagnoses. I really can't say I have seen much improvement if any at all since I began the treatment. However, I am not the least bit discouraged. It took nearly six years for the Lyme to advance as much as it did in my body, so I am not expecting it to go away within a month or two of treatment.

I can honestly say along with the Apostle Paul, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." And, I am learning to give thanks in everything. To mention just a couple of things, it is causing me to slow down a bit, helping me to appreciate my wife and co-workers more. It is also helping me with a life-long problem of delegation. I am finding, in the words of my favorite hymn writer, "strength for today and bright hope for tomorrow; great is [God's] faithfulness."

Not much has changed since then, neither in my condition nor in my attitude towards it. My voice is actually weaker now than it was back then. I know the Lord has a purpose and plan in all of this. As I have learned to pray, "Not my will, but Thine be done; I encourage you to pray along with me.
